Precious Hetty, dear: —

Your letter of Monday surprised a trifle, but since it is because of business I mustn't kick, but be tickled to death Honey, I sure was happy to read further on that you got the divorce case. Divorce cases seem to be your specialty, eh, but I wouldn't care if your letters consisted of only 3 words, namely "I love you," if it only meant that your cases keep you busy. I do want you to become prominent and well known. That little sign sure works wonders, don't it honey? Am so happy, precious that you are doing so nicely, really. You have no idea how much, honey. Thank heaven, letters will soon be, for us, a thing of the past. It is amazing how I try to make a single letter stretch over the entire day. In the morning when I pass the post office, I wish I had your letter, and keep on wishing until 12 or 12.30 it usually comes in either of these 2 mails. Then I am satisfied until evening and then I wish again I had another letter. Pretty soon dear, I'll have my last letter all day long, won't I?

Mr. Wallace is home to-day & if you knew under what difficulty this letter is being written, you would wonder I didn't give it up long ago. It is something fierce I just about manage to reach the chair when up I have to jump. They almost drive me crazy. I sure will be happy when I can leave this old dump." Was to go to my mother's home for supper to-night, but with the illness I wrote you about, and trying to do 2 peoples work, the rush in the trains will be too much for me. So we could off home. Will probably run up to-morrow, if all goes well. Here Mr. Wallace comes in.

Rather thought it would be too early for you to look for rooms. Hope you find something nice, and that arrangements have been set start from Friday P.M. Try very hard to do that, honey.

Had a night mare about you yesterday. Dreamt I got married to Mendel instead of you, and in my dream I was conscious of how much I loved you. I remember we telling Mendel and saying, look, Mendel, its true we didn't we got married, I wonder how I could have married you when I love you so much." The whole thing was amusing I then dreamt I had to go to see mum dear about some thing & in my dream I felt reluctant to go, as though I feared mum was hurt because I didn't marry you. On the way home I met Gladys with Henry coming from School, and I didn't know whether to talk to him as I was afraid he too, was engaged to me.

Well dear, I shall have to close now so shall send along all my love hugs - Kisses

Lovingly
Frances
